The door had been cut after some Treemason symbol to please Fred. I postical back the cutain and let in the melancholy moonlight upon the long shelves. Many of the books had been added since I came, and we had read thom together before I knew the diradful scent—that my hasband did not have me. Our literary tastes were similar. This most wrethed marriage had not been vehilly willoud compensation to Fred. He had not enly secured a heavileacher, but a companionable friend, a housekeeper, but a companionable friend, so I proudly said to myself. With all my outraged love for this man who had derievad me, I still kept my pride, it I had been a meck woman, I think I smould have died. It was my purpose to leave his house this very tright. I took from the secretary this very tight. I took from the sterrdary my writing desk, and lighting a lamp, commerced a letter to my lindsand. Words came readily enough, but they all failed to express my lauring indignation, my latter grief. I could not satisfy myself. I feared I might be still less ratisfied upon reflection. I must be deliberate. I would not write the letter to-night. I would put on my latter and sheaf and see a way. Leaving only a the lefter to-night. I would put on my hat and showl and steal away, leaving only a note with the words, "I have gone home, First," Then he would come to see me, and I could explain myself more raintly and chearly in my own father's house.

A SCENE AT ACRUEY PEISON, - A few days since, while two convicts were engaged in the shoc-shop of the Aubarn prison, assisting in packing goods preparatory to shipment, one of them "accidentally" happened to get nailed up in a packing case marked "60 pairs Brogans-Hs and 12s," The foreman of the shop observed the mark, and knowing that style of work had not been manufactured recently in the prison, immediately suspected something wrong. He accordingly informed theories couviet that he might set that box aside, as it would not be shipped. In about three minutes the top came off the hox and out jumped the occupant, he having heard the remark of the foreman. It was a close thing for him, however, as the carmon had already backed up to the door to draw the goods out.

NEWPORT DAILY NEWS, WEDNESDAY, August 21, 1867.

NICHOLAS OF THE PERES Switzerland is pre-eminently a hard of ronance. Its moss-crowned mountains; its sunny slopes, empurphed with vineyards, with village life; and, indeed, all its natural emotions of wonder and admination. The customs of the people, also, and the developements of art, assist in the impression produced by the grandeur of the landscape. The picturesque costumes of the inhabitants of the various cantons; the quaint cottages; the grand old churches; the antique streets and monuments of the cities, all lend an air history of Switzerland, more even than in its scenery or customs, that we find materials exciting the rensibilities of the heart, or the sentiment of wonder; for, both in political and religious matters, Switzerland has been the arena where despotism and liberty have grappled with each other in deadly strife, and where liberty, though gashed with many a featful wound, came off more than conqueror. There, both in state and in church, freedom asserted her rights, and bravely maintained them; for,

We have been fed to these remarks by reading Mr. Schudd's poem entitled "Nicholas of the Flue, the Savior of the Swiss Republic," a rapid review of which we propose in this article. The hook, a copy of which has been presented to us, Is published very neatly, with excellent paper and type, by McGill & Witherow of Washington City, and makes an attractive volume.

The poem is founded apan one of the most beautiful episodes of Swiss history, in which the Swiss people gained a moral victory over themselves, through the efforts of the pious Nicholas, and so brought to a peaceful issue serious internal dissensions which had threatened a civil war. The dramatts persona consist of Nicholas of the Flue, a hermit; Henry Im Grund, the pastor of the Stanz; Adrian Von Bubenberg, ex-Lord Provost of Berne; Hanns Waldmann, of Zurich, commander-in-chief of the Swiss forces; Louis, Count of Octtingen; Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgandy; and a number of other personages.-The time is from 1476 to 1482 The poem is east into dramatic form, and is divided into five acts. It is dedicated to Professor angfellow.

The first act opens with a scene in the Canton of Unterwalden, in the foreground a rustic dwelling, and in the distance the Alps glowing in the sumisc. Mary, within the house, sings the Ave Marin, and Aloys stands before the door! and Mary then appearing a dialogue ensues, suggested by the beauty of the scenery, and the thoughts it awakens concerning the patriotism of Switzenland's beroes. The first scene then con tinues with a very graphic description of Winkelbied, the immortal hers, in the baltle with the Austrians, gathering the spears of the enemy in his arms, and so making a way fo. the Swiss troops. This is the fit nous incident which forms the subject of many school-boy declamations, and Mr. Schaad has rendered it with rare skill and fervor. The next scene of the first act introduces us to the hermitage of Nicholas of the Flue, in the forest of Ranti, when a dialogue follows between Nicholas and Henry In Grund concerning the anticipated fave sion of Switzenland by Charles the Bold. We cannot, within the limits of this editorial, trace the poem through each act and scene; but, that our readers may obtain some knowledge of the plat, we give a few outlines of the drama. Adrian von Bubenberg is the friend Charles, Duke of Burgundy; but, when Charles attempts to concor Berne, Adrian stands by the fortunes of the Switzers. He has a son and a daughter, Edward, and Julia. Edward's life has been saved by Aloys. the adopted son of a present, Arnold of Unterwalden. Aloys is an orphan, whose parentage is a secret known only to Claus the hermit. He possesses great native worth of character, and performs deeds of valor on the battle-field of Granson. Bubenberg defends the town of Morat against a force of sixty thousand moler the command of the Dake of Burguerly, and during the siege his life is saved by Aloys. Love springs up in the heart of Al ys loward Julia, daughter of Bubenhery, which is reciprocated. The Swiss win the victory of Morat. After this, discoul miscs between the Forest Cantons and the cities of Herne, Lucerne and Zurich concerning the League, and a proposition is made that the cities secede; but Nicholas by his pious counsel, and Adrian by his dying injunction, prevent this treason and rebellion against the League, Edward, Lord Von Beetnberg, son of Adrian, and Aloys, after a pilgrimage to Palestine, during which they were abent two years, returned only in time to find Adrian, the noble ex-Lord Provest Berne, dying; and Aloys receives from Adrian his daughter Julia, whom he has long passionately loved. The hermit Nichoias reveals the secret of Aloys' birth, that he is of noble blood, the knight of Winkehiel. Edward is belrothed to Mary. So these two pairs, Aloys and Julia, Edward and Mary, are made happy in the possession of taci other, and holy love crowns their lives with blessing. There have been no fresh arrivals Lately. There are sixty-four vessels now in this port, exclusive of steamslips and domestic roasters, and eighty per cent, of the farmage is already under engagement. Grain and wheat is still coming foreward fredy. The steamer Continental has arrived from Origon. Advices from that Safe represents that the general crops are good. The lawyerop is deficient. The experiments in rabbing thay have resulted very successfully. General Crook had two engagements with the Indians hat week in the Puebla Mountains in Idaho territory, routing them, with the aid of friendly savages. The Arrizona Indians are plundering and murdering as badly as ever.

SIX PERSONS DROWNID. Bayen, N.H., Angust 20.—Yesterday marning a party of eleven persons started in a hoat for an island in Bow Lake in Stratford.
